Date: 11th January 2010

The Clinical Trial Company (Knutsford, UK); TCTC are pleased to announce that they will attend the Clinical Trials Congress, to be held at the JW Marriott, Mumbai, India from 20th to 22nd January 2010. Ewan Campbell, the director of TCTC, will be attending this congress as part of the UK Trade and Investment mission. Ewan, who will be representing TCTC on the UKTI stand, said "India is an important region for Clinical trials and TCTC are excited to be able to attend this meeting with the UK mission."

The conference will be discussing the practical and operational realities of successfully conducting research and clinical trials in India. There will be a total of 18 speakers covering sessions including 'Bridging the gap between clinical partnerships and operational performance', 'Understanding how the breakdown of the traditional Big Pharma business model impacts the future of clinical trial outsourcing' and 'Identifying the restraints holding clinical trials back in India and solutions for breaking free'.

As is widely reported, India is fast becoming a significant hub for conducting global clinical trials. From a small base, India is accelerating and on course to potentially conduct nearly 5% of all global clinical trials by 2012.

India's clinical trials market represents opportunities for significant revenue growth and cost savings. TCTC will be looking to expand in this area and show how its expertise can help sponsors overcome such challenges as incomplete trials, delay in trial approval and increase Good Clinical Practice (GCP) certified sites and investigators.

About the Clinical Trial Company

The Clinical Trial Company is a full service clinical contract research organisation (CRO) and was formed in the UK in 2002. The founders of TCTC realised that there was an opportunity in the CRO sector for a company which targeted medium sized clinical trials and novel products which did not have a classical road map to the market. The large CROs, for good business reasons, prioritise studies from the big pharmaceutical companies. However, this approach may sometimes disadvantage their smaller clients who are equally keen to complete their clinical trials quickly.

The Clinical Trial Company is headquartered in Knutsford in Cheshire, UK with regional offices in Cambridge, Berlin, Toronto and Montreal in Canada, as well as Sydney in Australia. TCTC also has operating divisions covering all aspects of drug development including The CRA Company, The Regulatory Affairs Company, The Clinical Training Company and the Clinical Quality Assurance Company.
